Dear Josh:

The beginning of every year brings the problem of getting a suitable number of victims to give seminars. Since private universities, in contradistinction to the public ones for which you labor, are short of money at this period, we must rely on people who are passing through New York. Is there any chance that you will be coming by this way sometime within the coming year and would find sufficient time to talk to the Department. You might find it interesting to return to the scene of your former crimes. While we cannot give you an honorarium, we can supply you with a first-rate dinner cooked by Mrs. Rittenberg, and pleasant company usually found in New York.

With kindest regards,

Yours sincerely,

D. Rittenberg
